

Wild Wanderers

A FAMILY BUSINESS

The Business Plan. Vision, numbers, next moves.

What we're building, what it earns, how we protect it, and what it takes. One document for the whole family to read and sign off on.

FOR GABE & SARAH BREWER · PREPARED WITH SOBO CONSULTING · FOUNDING DOCUMENT, V1

Two streams. One brand. Family owned.

Wild Wanderers has two revenue streams. Stream one: a boys' outdoor program on the Baylands, three mornings a week, ten boys per cohort. Stream two: a premium fitness practice for adults on the peninsula, one-on-one and small-group training. Gabe coaches both. The family owns both. SOBO builds the technology and coaches the business.

Why this works for the family

- The boys grow up in the business. They're on the trail with their dad now. This is an asset they can inherit and help run.
- Sarah's skill set covers the exact areas Gabe needs covered: operations, legal, structure. If and when she wants in, the seat is hers.
- The workday ends at 6 or 7. Gabe cooks dinner. The business is designed around that, and it stays that way.
- The work and the lifestyle are the same thing: training, being outdoors, raising the boys. No commute, no split life.

How we run the money side

- Premium, boutique, small client base. Menlo Park, Palo Alto, Los Altos. People here pay for quality and convenience. We charge for it.
- The whole model runs on about ten paying relationships on the fitness side plus one full cohort. Each client is worth $1,300+ a month. We treat them like it.
- Retention is the business. Keeping a client beats finding a client. Committed clients are monthly recurring revenue.
- The boys' program is the mission and it also pays. Paying families fund the program and, as we grow, scholarship spots.

Year one. Year three. Year five.

NEXT SUMMER

Both streams running. Family covered.

Fall cohort launched and full: ten boys, three mornings a week. Seven or more committed fitness clients at two to three sessions a week, plus at least one small group. $20k gross in a month, hit and held. The standard day: up at 5:30, own workout done, program at 8:30, clients in the afternoon, parents updated, done by 6 or 7. Sarah has reviewed the protection plan and the books. The family is bought in.

THE TEAM
FORMS

Second cohort. Second coach.

A second boys' cohort opens with a trained mentor leading it, so growth stops depending on Gabe's hours. Fitness grows by adding groups instead of stacking more one-on-ones. New clients pay higher rates; founding clients keep their price. If Sarah wants to coach, she's the first name on the list. The platform runs the operation: plans, tracking, parents, payments.

THE FAMILY BUSINESS

The Brewers, running it together.

A real family enterprise. Sarah works in the business if she chooses, off the corporate track because the business covers the household. The boys help lead as they grow. More cohorts, more groups, possibly the first location beyond the Baylands. Income clears the household number with margin, so the family has options.

DONE FOR THE DAY

How $20k a month adds up.

These are Gabe's actual prices. The practice grosses about $8k a month today. The build is a $12k bridge, and the math below shows the bridge is short.

REVENUE STREAM	THE UNIT	MONTHLY VALUE
Boys' cohort · 10 boys	$20 per hour · 3 days · 3 hrs a day ($180 a week per boy)	$7,200–7,800
One-on-one client	$150 a session · 2–3 sessions a week	$1,300–1,950 each
Small group (3 people)	$250 flat per session · 2–3 a week	$2,150–3,250
One full cohort + 7 committed clients + 1 group		≈ $20,000

What the math tells us

- Ten paying relationships on the fitness side runs the whole model. One client is worth $1,300+ a month. Losing one hurts. Service accordingly.
- An empty cohort spot costs $720–780 a month. Fill all ten.
- The group pays Gabe's best hourly rate: $250 an hour versus $150 solo. Growth comes from adding groups, because groups add revenue without adding calendar.

Two pricing fixes, month one

- The 12-pack at $2,000 comes out to $166 a session. That's above the $150 walk-in rate, so the package currently charges a premium for commitment. Reprice near $1,650.
- The group at $250 flat is about $83 a person, half the solo rate. Fine for launch. Raise it as groups fill.

Straight talk on take-home: the household target is $200k+ a year. $20k gross is $240k, before taxes and business costs. The LLC and write-offs recover part of that gap. Growth past $20k covers the rest. We track gross as the milestone and take-home as the truth.

Structure before students. Coverage before clients.

A business that takes other people's sons outdoors, and coaches adults on their health, runs on structure. Here is the operational skeleton with honest status. Month one closes every open item before the first family enrolls.

LAYER	WHAT IT COVERS	STATUS
Entity & books	LLC in good standing, separate business banking, clean bookkeeping, tax setup that captures legitimate write-offs	CONFIRM · MONTH 1
Insurance	General liability plus accident coverage rated for outdoor youth programs and in-home training	MONTH 1
Waivers & consent	Liability waiver, medical form, photo release, pickup authorization, parent agreement. All signed before day one	MONTH 1
Safety & readiness	CPR and first aid current, emergency protocols for the Baylands, weather rules, ratio held near one adult per six boys	CONFIRM · MONTH 1
Scope of practice	Certified fitness trainer. Nutrition and mental health are coached as habits, never diagnosed or treated. No medical claims anywhere	STANDING RULE
Data & privacy	Client health data lives in the Wild Wanderers app behind consent and strict access controls. Never in texts or spreadsheets	BUILT
Mentor standard	Any future mentor clears a background check, references, a walking interview, and first aid before working with the boys	STANDING RULE

Plain note: SOBO builds and coaches. We are not lawyers or insurance brokers. Month one includes review of the entity, coverage, and waivers by licensed professionals, so Sarah is looking at real documents.

What this takes. From everybody.

Gabe's job

- Sell. The pipeline is empty today. No five families and no five clients we can name yet. Months one and two are asking real people, in person, at real prices.
- Keep the standing rhythm: Mondays at 2pm with Remi. One focus per week. Homework done between sessions.
- Run the operation: program three mornings a week, clients in the afternoons, parents updated, done by dinner.
- Record the business conversations, including the family ones, so the plan keeps improving on real information.

The family's part

- Three mornings a week, Gabe and at least one small Brewer are on the Baylands.
- Six months of building before the picture matches the plan. Some weeks bring asks and nos. That's the job.
- A monthly family business meeting: Gabe and Sarah, books open, plan on the table.
- Sarah's review of the protection plan and the books. Structure is her strength and the business needs it.

SOBO's part

- The build: website, app, enrollment engine, client platform. Live and growing.
- The coaching: strategy, accountability, and the next step, every week for six months.
- The documents and the numbers: this plan, the six-month build plan, and honest tracking the whole way.

The next 90 days

- Month one: protection closed, prices fixed, pipeline machine built, first asks made.
- Month two: enrollment push. Boys and clients in parallel. September filling up.
- Month three: fall session launches. The standard day becomes the normal day.

The operating principle is the one Gabe already coaches: Kyezen. Small improvements, most days, compounding over the long haul. Same rule for the boys, the clients, and the business.
